What's New in the Anti-Keylogger?

The application is able to circumvent any and all attempts to log keystrokes. It can also prevent any sensitive information from being viewed. The Anti-Keylogger will detect any type of key logger (or keystroke logger for short) and prevent its functionality. All key logging programs are now detected and the program hides the keys they try to intercept and intercepts them. When you press the keys, you see a text message indicating the attempts to log it, so you know that there is something you are not seeing. When you run Keylogger the first time, it will ask you to input the correct password for your machine. If the password is wrong, the Keylogger will cease its functions. You will only see the text messages in the AutoCom form of the program. For key loggers to work, they have to stay on the system and have system rights. The Keylogger detection is very smart. It does not start itself as a Windows service or Run Program (any program, like Google Chrome, that runs in the background). It does not start as a service unless it is started by another process. A Windows Key Logger is not detected, because it does not have the correct access rights to be able to detect the Keylogger. The Anti-Keylogger will not detect a debugger (the Keylogger would have to be running in the system). The Anti-Keylogger will not detect any event viewer (the Keylogger would have to be running in the system). The Anti-Keylogger will not detect any trace program. (Trace program is a log). You will see the message saying that the Keylogger was detected, but that it is hidden to you. You will see all of the keys that the Keylogger tried to log on your machine. If you see a message showing that the Keylogger is detected, you can continue using your computer safely. It will not harm you or your computer. Once the Keylogger is detected, the Keylogger will disappear from the list of processes and you will not see any text messages. If you want to continue having the Keylogger on your machine, you must run the Keylogger process as administrator. Anti-Keylogger Features: • Uses advanced forensics techniques to prevent keystroke logging • Shows the intruder the text message generated by the Keylogger
