(Follow-up: My Wordrobe for Coffee-time. (Follow-up 2: Photo Memoirs in my Coffee-time.)) Coffee Time is a real-time (24/7) network of like-minded people who share stories and pictures by blogging in a private, collaborative format. The host site is run by a user and can be set up to be a general activity log or a specific niche site. The ability to set up separate blogs and change the design of your blog (including photo upload capability, text boxes, the sidebar, etc.) gives you a certain freedom to customize your Coffee-Time experience to suit your needs. The idea for Coffee Time came from a need I have for a real-time web journal that is private (and I mean that in the privacy sense: you only sign into one or a few sites for real time-sharing, not to sign into a bunch of different ones for fragmented, separate activity). While I have maintained an online journal through itunes.com and google docs since 2002, I found that neither site was satisfactory. Itunes.com was too limited (no commenting, sharing blogs in real time, etc.), and although google docs had the ability to link with other google docs, it lacked real-time blogging. My idea was to create a social network where my friends and family (many of whom aren't online much) could comment and share experiences with me in real time. Setting up
