I had a full plane for back-to-back trips, and had the hardest time being coherent! One of my questions on my to-do list for Argentina was to get a jugo, my quick and easy poso, a Latin American version of a jam or Jelly. First I had to find a purveyor of homemade Jugos. While this is a very old fashioned way of making Jugo, it's authentic and as old as the immigrants who discovered it. I found two purveyors of Jugos in Buenos Aires. First I went to a small area of Leandro N. Alem, a favorite neighborhood in Buenos Aires. The purveyors of Jugo are closed for lunch, but I was able to meet them for an informal interview in their café. I really liked the men, the way they answered my questions, and their passion for Jugo. I went next to their shop in La Recoleta, a very affluent neighborhood just south of Buenos Aires. It was really nice to be in a richer neighborhood, which served well in helping me get the right kind of Jugo. The source of their production was a traditional Amul, the traditional frozen milk jug sold by Amul in Argentina. Now they purchase this milk from the dairy wholesalers. They then use organic juice concentrates to create a thick, creamy, mouth-filling, and invigorating Jugo. They offer three different style Jugos with different flours, fruits and spices. I bought two flavors to try out at home. I liked the kind of Jugo they call "juyu" because it mixes fruits from the season. So my sister made Juyu for me, with pomegranate and oranges. And the other flavor I bought was the "Venga", a variation on an old recipe. It's a fruit Jugo, but the fruit is apricot. After I had my Jugos, I felt as if
