We're developing an application that hosts a lot of files, and we would like to have a file storage, that is optimized for loading large quantities of data (like from mysql). The only way I know to do this is using Google's Multipart service, but its free, and we would like to avoid its cost if we can. Thanks, A: By default, the file is saved on the instance on your account, and at a path that is public but not accessible to the public. That's the cost of the flexibility. When the file is uploaded, it is converted to a blob, then that blob is saved in the datastore. You can read more about how Blobstore handles files in their pricing page. Broken to make music Despite the odds, a music student is continuing with her education and making music. by Wendy Smith Tasha McKenzie's life seems to have changed dramatically since September 2009. At that time, she was working as a management assistant to help pay for her college degree. Then, the unthinkable happened. The family homestead
