Sebastian Manrique was left in a coma for two days after being punched and kicked in the head after getting into a fight with a gang who attacked him and a group of friends in Costa Azahar, Granada, on May 19. He was brought to the intensive care unit at the La Paz Hospital where he remained for the next two days. Spanish media say the attack followed an altercation between a group of Dutch tourists and a party of Colombians. Mr Manrique, from Madrid, said: "I was walking along in the street with my friends when a group of Colombians came over and started complaining about what they had seen a couple of days before in Plaza del Carmen. "They took offence at what they saw as graffiti and started telling us the Colombians did not have any good manners. We walked off, but as we were about to cross the street, the Colombians blocked the path and started shouting at us. "I told them we were Spanish and they shouted back at me to go back to my country. This upset me because I am Spanish, but I am tolerant. "There were about 12 Colombians, but I only saw three of them, because the others ran away. "The Colombians started using swear words in Spanish and swearing in English, but I don't know why they started cursing. I thought it was because we were speaking Spanish. "I was told the Colombians came from the Alhambra because I later saw them running towards it. "On the escalator that leads down to the tree- 3da54e8ca3
