This important study investigates the routes of contamination for two common mycotoxins and four water-soluble mycotoxins, to-wit, ochratoxin A (OTA) and deoxynivalenol (DON), zearalenone (ZEA) and T-2 toxin (T-2), in urban and rural watersheds. The results demonstrate a distinct difference in the proportion of OTA and DON at each of the three sites. The rural site had the highest concentration of OTA, the urban site had the highest concentration of DON, and the urban and rural sites had similar concentrations of ZEA and T-2 toxin. The quantitative differences in mycotoxin concentrations were explained by
