Hungary's right-wing populist Prime Minister Viktor Orbán vowed on Wednesday to beat back the threat of an Islamisation of Europe in a speech to his party's youth wing in which he also struck a nationalist tone. Vowing to "dismantle the corrupt regime of open borders and porous borders", Orbán rejected migration from the Middle East and Africa saying it "doesn't represent a solution to the migrant problem". "The migration crisis is not about to be resolved by taking in any more, especially people from the Middle East or Africa," Orbán said. "If these people were well-educated, hardworking and honest, they would not leave their homeland to come to Europe as the first step in joining the migration crisis," the prime minister told the audience. "No, we must all get back to working towards the goal: that Europe belongs to Europeans," he said, adding "we will beat those who are trying to intimidate us into giving up our homeland". "We Hungarians are resisting an invasion and we will not surrender!" he said. Hungary cracked down on migrants and refugees after it joined the EU in 2004 but now has some of the strictest border controls in the bloc, a change celebrated by Orbán. Orbán has frequently clashed with Brussels over the admission of more migrants, and argues that Hungary was
