The specific aims are: Aim 1 is to determine if the increased response to angiotensin II and the intravascular coagulopathy occur at the same time or at different times in this model of diet hypercholesterolemia. We will use the renal clearance of 125I-labelled angiotensin II (125I- ANG II) to determine this. Aim 2 is to determine if cholesterol-induced increase in the cellular cholesterol level and the resulting decrease in cholesterol-rich membrane lipid microdomains, also are important in the increased response to ANG II. We will use to this end the measurement of the biliary, microsomal and high density microsomal cholesterol levels as well as the dye filipin, which binds to cholesterol in vivo. Aim 3 is to determine if the increase in renal vascular resistance and glomerular microcirculatory and macromolecular permeability are due to the decreased formation of lipoproteins and/or the impaired metabolism of lipoproteins. The role of these changes in this abnormality will be assessed. These experiments will be carried out in cholesterol-fed rabbits and cholesterol-fed rats, using the isolated kidney perfusion technique and fluorescent labeled dextrans of different molecular sizes. The results obtained will provide insights into the mechanisms and the importance of the interaction between diet hypercholesterolemia and renal
