Coe said that the 98-day Games would not be "the games that are remembered and cherished," but rather the price to be paid for economic recovery that was the cause of the inquiry being held. "The public were told we were going to have the best Olympics," Coe said in opening remarks to the sport select committee. "They were told we were going to be the best prepared for the job at the best price. "We are not delivering either of those statements. "We are delivering an Olympics that, at best, is mediocre, at worst, is worst than mediocre." Britain's Department for Culture, Media and Sport admitted that too few public venues are ready and that many cash-strapped city councils are holding up the handover to the Olympic Park to the last minute. "Any cost overruns on the Olympic Park is Britain's problem and ours alone," Coe said. Coe said that planning for the London Olympics was made more difficult because the budget for the project was "political" and the election of a Labour government in 1997 meant new "political imperatives" were imposed on the Games. He also demanded that the committee investigate the "theoretical" budgetary problem of the UK not being able to afford to hand over the Games. Coe said: "We have the Olympic Park contract but it has been made to constrain us not to undertake anything other than what we do. "There is nothing to stop any of us raising the carpet up and doing anything but that's not how you win Olympic gold." Cohen was joined by sports minister Tessa Jowell, London mayor Boris Johnson and the heads of the London Organising Committee of the Olympic Games (Locog). The select committee has a "special responsibility" to
