I see them all the time, people shooting with the camera very close to their subjects. It may be a nice touch, but it can be harsh on the eyes. When you take close-ups on the eyes, the pupils of the eye become much bigger and the whites of the eyes look very bright. It's my advice to people to keep a distance between the camera and the subject. This is one of my favorite close-ups because I love the bright colors and the fact that the designer purposefully had the portrait printed on thick paper.About The Dakota The Dakota is the latest addition to the Diamond Parks and Resorts family, providing high-quality, beautiful, upscale accommodations and unparalleled services for the discerning guest. breast cancer are diagnosed with oestrogen-dependent breast cancer (IBC) which is the 5th most common cancer in women. IBC is typically hormonally responsive making it less harmful in comparison to locally advanced/metastatic breast cancer that often requires systemic (chemo)therapy.

Although new therapies are becoming available for IBC, the treatment options for the overwhelming majority of these patients is cytotoxic chemotherapy, which is associated with considerable morbidity and low rates of long-term survival. Therefore, targeted therapy to erbB2 has emerged as an attractive adjuvant to the current therapeutic regimens. (Leach et al., Breast Cancer Res. Treat, 75:103-108, 2005; WO2006/034929; WO2009/046668).

However, most of the currently available monoclonal antibodies against erbB2 target extracellular regions of the receptor and are therefore unable to mediate receptor down-regulation in the short term. The second generation of erbB2 inhibitors, such as trastuzumab, has demonstrated an increased efficacy (in terms of disease-free survival) compared to the first generation of erbB2 inhibitors, for example lapatinib. In addition to the development of an effective drug for the treatment of IBC, there is also a need for biomarkers to help with early diagnosis and prognosis of IBC, especially in women with potential precancerous lesions, e.g. proliferative or atypical ductal hyper
