The border officer had just come into the car and opened the door. He was very apologetic - he didn't have a choice, and he wanted to let me know there was nothing he could do to help me. I think he was scared as I was yelling into the dark at 2am, in the middle of nowhere. I had been pulled over by a carful of armed men and told to follow them to a remote spot by the US-Mexico border. I had no idea what was happening, why this was happening, or what would happen next. I was suddenly flung into a world of modern surveillance, where it had become all too easy to be caught up in an endless cycle of immigration enforcement. Many have watched in horror as the policy came together and rolled out across the US, with the Trump administration accelerating the process that had begun in 2014 with executive orders issued by Barack Obama. The result is what's known as a "metering" policy, or the use of "trusted traveller" programs by US border officers. Under metering, a certain number of people a day are selected to be stopped at the border to apply for a permit to stay in the US. This works by the US border agents, e79caf774b
