must for sci-fi geeks, history buffs and hidden object games fans! – A cast of mysterious creatures to guide you!
– Over 20 changing locations to explore in two worlds! – Over 10 Hidden Object modes for devoted finding games fans! – Unique mechanics of crafting boosters from the found ingredients! – Over 1100 days of gameplay for mystery games geeks! – An unknown event dated back at the turn of the common era affected the timeline and caused the two worlds collide. Now you must start the time machine and find hidden objects associated with the core events of the passed years to reconstruct the world chronology. Beware! The brink between the two worlds has become too vague, so, no one could predict what reality you end up at your next time leap. Any seek-and-find location may appear in its true or mystic perspective, while the item list is presented as either letters, numbers or symbols. Cleverly hidden on the scene, they are scattered randomly each time you enter the location, providing limitless i-spy experience. As you journey to the past, you will collect souvenirs from each year you come to be in order to complete different tasks and earn experience points. As you progress through the storyline, you will witness the development of the modern civilization in its various aspects science, technology, philosophy, politics, art and more. Each collection you complete displays the evolution of a particular instrument of human culture and make an assumption of its further advance. Its time for the quest of your life! Find yourself in a twisted reality, search for hidden symbols, decipher the meaning of the secret numbers and open the gate to the future in this breathtaking sci-fi adventure

What's new in Music Maker 2022 Premium Steam Edition:

(railway engineer) Thomas Scott (1822 - 28 September 1896) was an engineer of locomotives and railway lines. Biography Thomas Scott was born at Abbey Barr and educated at Dollar Academy and the University of Glasgow. In the late 1840s he became an assistant engineer in the Bank of Scotland. He also did some work on railways in the United States and Australia. From 1854 onwards he did some work for the Glasgow and South Western Railway (G&SWR) in England. From 1864 Scott developed a locomotive he called the "Scotch Express" which received good reviews at exhibitions. He decided to take it to America because he was concerned that he would not be as successful there. Scott also knew George Couper who wanted to go to America to work on the railways and asked him to come out to work for the G&SWR. Couper eventually accepted the offer and Scott worked with him for five years. Development of the various locomotive classes His first engine developed for the G&SWR was the "Flying Scotsman" 0-4-4-0 of 1866. It was a miniature version of the 4-4-0 "Sir Watkin Williams" which had been successful on the Midland Railway in England, an engine with which Scotts had familiarity. After trying out different wheel arrangements, Scott found that the best arrangement was short wheels in the rear and long outside. A refinement of this arrangement was to split a bogie and put the long outside axle on the outside section. In 1876 Scott developed a new arrangement, a side-mounted two-axle engine, which had a higher maximum speed than the previous arrangement and greater carrying power. The results of these developments were four locomotive classes in the G&SWR fleet. The first engines proved useful in transatlantic hauling services. They hauled a train from London to Alexandria and back to Scotland as a result of the Midland Railway's failure to complete the Great Northern Railway's newly planned line from Grantham to King's Cross in 1862. They were particularly well suited to the third-rail single-line electrified standard gauge of the Great Western Railway and the Cramlington and Whitburn Railway, where they earned much praise from the railway engineer. The Flying Scotsman was the fastest express locomotive built for use in Britain at the time of its construction, both on metal
