Researchers from the National Laboratory for High-Performance Switching Devices (LNLS) at CENIACAS and the University of Aveiro, in Portugal, have demonstrated in an article published in the Microprocessors and Computer Society Journals, the advantages of using the TMN⁻² (TRIangular MODulator) device to improve the performance of low power devices. The TMN⁻² is a device based on the principle of heterojunction bipolar transistor (HBT) built on a bulk heterojunction (BHJ) dielectric with symmetric composition. Due to their architecture, both inverted TMN⁻² and non-inverted TMN⁻² devices have very low internal non-linearity and are easy to fabricate. These characteristics allow these devices to be used for a variety of applications, particularly those that require low power and high accuracy levels. They also show that the TMN- τ^2 devices offer a good tradeoff between speed and power consumption, making the devices ideal for high speed applications. More than one million people have been displaced in southern Africa since fighting erupted last month between the government and South African-backed rebels in the war-torn Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC). An estimated 60,000 people have been killed in the war, which has spread to neighbouring Rwanda, Uganda and Burundi. At least 1.5 million people are thought to be in need of assistance. A UN-backed mission has been established to assess the needs of civilians in the three countries, and those seeking shelter at UN peacekeeping bases. The UN has praised the outbreak of dialogue between the DRC government and a rebel alliance. "There is no place for armed groups who have no alternative to military solutions," says UN spokesman Peder Blandt. "The conditions for dialogue have emerged," he says. "There's confidence that this dialogue will lead to a lasting peace." Rebels seized a number of towns in the troubled province of Ituri last month, along with much of the strategic road system that links the territory to the capital, Kinshasa. Many displaced villagers have been hosted at UN bases in Goma. In addition, about 25,000 displaced people have taken refuge in the Rwandan capital, Kigali. Rwanda has offered to host some 100,000 Congolese and both countries are working on repatriation plans
