Purchase The program sells for $800 but comes with a one-year subscription and a $25 upgrade at any time. Learn how to use Photoshop The first thing you should know about Photoshop is that there are two different versions. Photoshop CS5 and Photoshop CS6. CS6 is a significant improvement over CS5 and can only be purchased with a new computer. If you're computer is not new, you'll need to upgrade from Photoshop CS5. Photoshop CS5 itself is a fairly streamlined version of the program, and can be used as long as you remember to keep your computer's update options on. Most of the tools that are compatible with Photoshop CS5 (such as the brush options) are also compatible with Photoshop CS6. Additionally, Photoshop CS5 has a much faster startup time. You can also try using Photoshop Elements instead, which is a scaled-down and much cheaper version of the program. While Photoshop Elements lacks the graphics power of Photoshop, it does contain many tools that are usable for beginners and designers. Tools Photoshop's most useful tool is the move tool, also known as the sculpting tool. Using the move tool, you can easily manipulate elements of your image by placing them onto other parts of the photo. Place a brush on a face, and simply drag it to a different area of the photo to make that area transparent. Place a face on a different face, and the outline of that face will appear in the area where that face was placed. Another good tool in Photoshop is the selection tool. Using the selection tool, you can isolate objects and delete them from your photo. Select the tool, and place it on an object. You'll see the object outlined in white, and the selection tool will readout where the object is. Select the area around the object, and the outline will go around the selection. Delete the unwanted parts, and you've removed that object. The brush tool is another useful tool in Photoshop that can be used for a variety of tasks. It comes with a simple menu system of shapes, as well as the standard brushes that you've come to expect. The brush tool has a vast array of colors, sizes, and shapes that are easy to apply to various parts of your image. Another tool useful in Photoshop is the lasso tool. The lasso tool works similarly to the selection tool. You'll select an area of the image, and its outline

They worked for him, and for the Clintons. When Eric Fehrnstrom, the man who conducted Hillary Clinton's 2008 presidential campaign, left the team, he was replaced by press secretary Brian Fallon. Last week, Fallon also left the team, and the reporters looking into the matter wonder if the departures are connected. But the pair's departure dates are probably coincidental, at least from a White House standpoint. They're just two more from a list of several thousand political staffers who were hired to work under the notion that Clinton will run for president again in 2016. She has not said publicly that she will do so, even though she is repeatedly asked about the subject at public appearances. The New York Times has identified several more departures in 2014 who were rumored to be ready to join her effort: Ron Barnett, the finance director, in January; Heather Ragone, the deputy communications director, in August. But their departure dates are also suspect: Barnett officially left on Aug. 28, while Ragone's date of departure isn't known yet. Ragone was hired on June 30, 2014, a little over two months before her departure was announced, according to documents in the Federal Elections Commission database. She was paid $100,000, while Barnett's exact salary isn't known, but FEC records show it was at least $140,000. Jeff Moran, communications director for a super PAC supporting Clinton, told The Times he assumed both Ragone and Barnett would work in the West Wing. "It's my best guess. I didn't directly follow it because I'm really focused on this fall," he said of Ragone. Ragone has been a key player in Clinton's press strategy for several years. She was press secretary for Clinton's 2008 campaign, serving in that capacity for about six months. She was rehired in April 2009 by the Senate campaign of Republican Sen. Jon Kyl, then served on the campaign's communications team until 2009. The departure of Fallon and Ragone took their place, at least in the minds of reporters, as the next missing pieces in Clinton's campaign planning. The next two names were touted by the Times as Fallon's and Ragone's replacements: Kristina Schake, who was a spokeswoman for the Democratic National Committee, and Mari St. Martin,
