What's new in Color By Number - Medieval Portrait:

This is a portrait by Abbot Otto Valdebrandis that is in the church of the Abbey of Norbertine Vorzeitliche Christiane Annelore von Mainz on Pferdehausufer 5, Norbertinum. I hope and think the coins in the portrait are heads of money coins bearing the names Hoc, Sigbert, Leoba and Auflieba (if memory serves). It was painted in the 14th century when the coins would have been round. I will check if I can find any of the five to post them separately for the piece. blondie: The yellow and blue one looks fine to me and should be the "blue knight" coin with Sigbertus and Leoba on it. The one with the bowl for the king is the one with Hoc, "the margrave" on it. The brown coin is the cent with Auflieba who's head looks like one of the royals to me. Hi, you name me after a childhood accident not a christian pseudonym. I thought we agreed on that. It's a pretty ambiguous image. Well, the blue knight needs to be Giselbertus and the king is Hulbaldus. The blue knight pays Leoba (is that right?) and the lady (is that right?) is Auflieba. She's the margrave's wife. Add the Auflieba coin and there you go. The bowl coin is of course the one with Auflieba, the near one the one with Hoc, the far one Sigbertus or Giselbertus (you really can't tell at all). There are two more possible interpretations I could think of off the top of my head that are nearly as good but I don't know how many of them there are, would have to think longer. Also, the coins don't fit 100% into the composition. I see colour by number pieces running that are more picturesque than accurate. Sorry blondie, I guess I was being a bit sarcastic... I always thought you meant the christian name you were given was Christophorus or something like that, not Christiana, a real nickname. Never worked it all out, since you say you did that to protect your identity, as I thought you meant as the image was only of your head/face. Anyhow, here are some links for some information on coins of various reigns, some kings appear twice
