""les vérifications nécessaires"" :q: arcgis for desktop 10.5.1 - get data from sql server, request service from hosted service, sample in python script? this is not a map related question, it is more general data wrangling and transformation question. i have a local sql server 2012 and i want to use sql server to populate a new feature dataset (indoor layout) which should be reprocessed every year and it will be used for mobility tracking of users in the office. i have developed a small application based on python 3.3.2 that handles the data requests to the sql server, but i don't know how to return the data to a feature dataset (containing shapefiles) and i don't want to use arcgis online for this usecase. i am considering to use arcgis for desktop 10.1. is there a way to prepare the data and request the data from the sql server and have the data process and load to a newly created feature dataset? do you have any sample on how to prepare the data and how to make a connection between the feature dataset and the sql server. for the preparation the data in the database i am using a small database application that i have written, this application access the database through ado in python. the data is in a pyodbc compliant format and when accessing the database through pyodbc the data is sent to the database server. this is the database application i am thinking about to use: <https://github.com/bobbviz/predatastabb> a: if your sql server is accessible over the internet you can consider subscribing to arcgis online to create a web app. if you cannot access the sql server over the internet, you can consider arcgis server for hosting your sql server. for both suggestions you will need an arcgis pro license to connect the server to arcgis online (at the beginning) or arcgis server (for creating the data warehouse). the code below is in python, but, it can be anything you like, for example, arcpy. first, install arcgis pro, connect it to arcgis online and create a new web app with the wizard. after that, go to file → data → add data source. in the data source wizard choose the arcgis online option to select a layer from your current organization. click next enter your application id and api key choose what web services you want to use (esri geodatabase, sql server, postgresql, etc.) in the http section, enter the url where your sql server is. for example: jdbc:postgresql://ip:5432/my_database in the authentication section, follow the steps to get the credentials. after that, you can enter the sql server credentials (as you did before). continue by giving the name, host, port, login, password, database and user.
