

during the spanish period, the philippines was among the poorest and most backward of european colonies. however, in the first decades of the american period, the philippines was one of the fastest-growing economies of the world, and the people had a very high standard of living. life expectancy was high, health was good, and the philippines enjoyed a high literacy rate and a fairly advanced system of schools. the people were proud of their spanish heritage, which was evident in the number of filipinos who had graduated from the university of santo tomas in the first half of the 20th century. another aspect of the country's history that has had a major impact on the way filipino society is organized is the american period. in the first years of the american period, the country was a colony of the united states. in the second half of the 20th century, it has been a developing country and a member of the association of southeast asian nations (asean). the philippines became a republic in 1946, and the country was finally granted independence in 1946. however, the united states remained the dominant economic power in the country until 1972. the country was thus under u.s. hegemony and influence until 1972. during this period, the philippines became the second most-industrialized country in asia after japan, and its economy developed significantly. its manufacturing and industrial output was second only to japan's in the 1950s, and its mining output was one of the highest in the world in the 1950s. the philippines was among the top 10 exporting countries in the world in the 1950s.

The Filipino Family By Belen Medina Pdf Free families that follow a western model are less common in the philippines. although such families exist, they are less well organized and integrated than other types of families. this is because the philippines is undergoing a period of modernization and westernization, especially in urban areas. several factors may be considered in understanding this development. first, the major source of influence is the united states government, which has imposed and imposed a range of western values and practices on the philippines. second, the filipino people have been accustomed to and comfortable with traditional family life, which was based on the extended family, not the nuclear family. the modernization of the philippines has resulted in changes in both the marital and the family systems. modernization has also caused many filipinos to work for large corporations and in the government, which requires them to live in dormitories and not at home. in these situations, filipino families are more likely to be nuclear, because of the great distances that often exist between extended family members. the filipino family was and continues to be part of a culture that is diverse in many ways, and at the same time, has maintained and preserved its traditional qualities. the filipino family has been an integral part of the philippines, and it is one of the most important institutions in the philippines, although the philippines is undergoing some modernization in the areas of social and family life. the traditional family in the philippines is a complex institution, and is composed of different types of families, including nuclear, extended, and blended families, each with its own characteristics, forms, and meaning. 5ec8ef588b
