the song 'munni badnaam hui' from the film is very beautiful. the song is interspersed with a backdrop of dialogue from the film. for some reason, the mood that characterised the song was lost and you can't imagine a singer like arko 'abba' to ever sing like this. what goes missing is that 'desi' and 'mati' factor and the song loses its charm. the cast in moharjo daro is superlative. veteran actor kabir bedi (sardar) takes on the role of a fatherly guru. he is surrounded by a fine ensemble cast, which includes hrithik roshan, suhasini mulay, and arunoday singh. the latter two are newcomers who shine in the film. the supporting cast and lead actors in the film are reliable and brings the narrative to life. the story is about the rise of moharjo daro, the city under seer and a marvellous art-piece. arunoday singh, as nana sahib had claimed, could be the next marg (fresh & fresh & fresh) and here, nansabhee gets the plum role and plays it very well. the look of the film, grandiose and lush, is stunning and does justice to the tale. now, comes the twist. after being carried in a suspended state for two-and-a-half hours (and a long time is a long time, a film of a few hours requires more of your attention), the story begins to get dragged down by the sheer weight of its gimmicks. the settings and the sets are visually impressive. what's notable is the choice of music. be it the magnificent soundtrack or the serene images or the arid and serene colours, the film seems more of a doze than a movie. the cinema halls also offer a flavour of the laid-back that seems unconnected to the film's story. far too many occurrences that never seemed necessary are placed front and centre. ashutosh gowariker has zero grasp of the tricks of filmmaking and his misguided imaginations have almost ruined the film. 5ec8ef588b
