Shape { int a; int b; int c; }; class Rectangle : public Shape { int x; int y; int width; int height; }; Now I want to write a function that takes in a type and returns whether or not it is an enumeration. How would I write a function like this? bool isEnumeration(Type t) {... } A: I'd say for now, you have to assume that there could be a derived class from Shape and perhaps consider using std::is_enum for that instead of manually checking every class. A: If you don't want to make this a generic function, then your best bet is to use RTTI to identify the class: bool isEnumeration(Type t) { return t.IsEnum; } If you'd like to have a generic function, you'll need to make it use the plain old C++ function std::is_enum. So you'd want something like this: template bool isEnumeration(T t) f988f36e3a
