Alligator Boy Alligator Boy is a novel by the American writer Horace Leland Cope, published in 1923. It was made into a movie of the same name in 1926. Plot summary In 1890s Florida, the future doctor and novelist Harold Nathan, a medical doctor, and his father, the professor, are hunting Alligator Boy, an apish man who lives in the swamp and is rumored to have the ability to transform into a vicious alligator. After they find the boy, and the boy's brother, Rodolph, they track the boy to his father, who has been killed by a French trapper. Nathan learns that the boy has the ability to transform into a giant alligator; after the boy murders several people at a swamp-town carnival, they track him to his father's home, where he transforms into an alligator and kills several people with his own hands. The boy is shot with an air rifle, and falls into a lake; despite Nathan's
